CARD PLAYING IS IMMORAL

Dr. Stough Declares that it Intoxicates the Moral Nature -No Better than Dice Throwing or Any Game of Chance-Central Baptist Church Filled at Evangelistic Meeting.

the union evangelistic campaign, which is beginning its last week in this city, having changed from the armory, where the meetings have been held in the preceding weeks. There was an attendance of about 700 at the church, a large part of these being in the big chorus choir which was placed in the gallery. Mr. Spooner led them from the platform in the opening song service and they filled the church with an inspiring volume of melody.

Dr. Stough made the following announcements; Tuesday and Thursday mornings, cottage prayer meetings.

You have killed the basis of apirituality when you do not trust to faith those things which you cannot fathom by reason, conscience and will, as God has commanded.

nouncements; Tuesday and Thursday mornings, cottage prayer meetings. Tuesday, 3 p. m., Dr. Stough and Mr. Spooner at First Congregational church, Norwich Town, and Rev. F. O. Cunningham and Mr. Herring at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church. Tuesday evening as prelude to sermon Dr. Stough speaks on Is It Wrong to Dance? Wednesday afternoon at Central Baptist church, sunset service, a tribute to the aged. Names of aged people who need special conveyance to people who need special conveyance to attend are solicited, also names of people willing to furnish conveyance. wednesday night, admission by ticket only, which shall be some article to eat or to wear. Thursday to be day of rejoicing, when articles contributed will be distributed under auspices of United Workers. Afternoon service at cond Congregational church. Card Playing is Immoral.

As a short talk before his sermon or, Stough gave his answer to the question is it Wrong to Play Cards He would present the psychological argument against the game, he said, and did not wish his words to be taken as a tirade against the game or a denun-ciation of all amusements. He was speaking as a teacher in trying to answer the question of whether card playing is an act in which anybody who desires to be moral can indulge. who desires to be moral can induige. He classified all games as either games of skill or of chance. To games of skill belong baseball, football, croquet, golf, tennis, crockinole, chess, checkers, billiards, pool and caroms, and to games of chance belong card games and dice games. In games of skill, chance does not enter in as a funda-mental factor of winning, but in games mental ractor of winning, but in games of chance you cannot exercise the highest skill to win without chance entering into the result. All games of chance are immoral. Why, then, is a chance game immoral or an immoral act to do?

Man depends for his success in life upon three things, his reason, his con-science and his will. All must operate science and his will. All must operate freely together for the best good, and if any of these is impaired you cripple the whole man, making him unbalanced incompetent and untrustworthy. What relation does card playing bear to these three? They all deal with the facts you know, but in card playing the element of chance is in the unknown. In a game of cards there are five factors, yourself, the three oppofive factors, yourself, the three oppo-nents and the cards. You have one-lifth of the knowledge to win on, there ifth of the knowledge to win on, there are four unknown factors against one known. In this condition of things reason is opposed to conscience, conscience opposed to will, and will opposed to reason over which card to play, each struggling with the unknown, and whether winning or losing it is a constant struggle between these three things, producing a nerve-strain and feverish condition when these three are constantly keyed up to the hazard of the game.

Leads to Gambling Instinct. Scientists will tell you that as the result of an evening of cards there is aroused a fever of excitement which amounts to intoxication of the moral nature, and in the constant temptation John Dunn of Norwalk is spending fair, and it is easy to do something unfair, and it is only a step to develop the gambling instinct, so intoxicated and controlled does the moral nature become. The effect is the same upon Mr. and Mrs. John J. Somers have reached their new home at Dallas, Tex., after a wedding tour of several weeks.

Gamblers Start from Card Playing. Gamblers Start from Card Playing.

Dr. Stough stated that it was the testimony of gamblers that 75 per cent. of them started from parlor card playing, and it was through the home and parlor card games that boys got their start towards gambling. The home where cards were played could snare the boy much quicker than the gambling den, for the gambler has no time to teach greenies. If then, here we have something that has produced three-fourths of the gamblers, what is its relation to the Christian home? This intoxication for the game will explain why people in Norwich will play through a revival like this without giving up a single meeting of a giving up a single meeting of a

Not Low Enough to Play Bridge. At the close of his argument Dr. Stough read a letter from Mrs. A. B. Stong read a letter from Mrs. A. B. Sims of Des Moines champion woman whist player of the United States, who was converted in a revival, but said she had never got so low as to play bridge, and she declared dancing and card playing to be the two greatest evils of Christendom.

Several Make a New Startand Dr. Stough had led in prayer after reading fifteen requests for prayers that had been handed in, he took up his sermon, which was a brief one, as so much time had been consumed on the talk on card playing. He used for his text the verse in Luke, "I will arise and go to my father," a few words from the sollloquy of the prodigal son. In the midst of all his trouble the prodigal got a vision a vision of the prodigal got a vision, a vision of his father's home, his father's house and his father's love. It was love that and his father's love. It was love that brought him home, not sin, for sin don't produce repentance, but only remorse. Love is the only thing that produces repentance. The produgal came home because he dared to trust his father's love. God is most anxious that you shall turn your feet into the heavenly way and start back to him.
